in their expressions of profound regretin their outgushing sympathy with the President and his wife and venerable motherin their very looks-we read how true it is, as the great English poet says, that "one teuch of nature makes the whole world kin." We all feel as if a personal wrong had been done to us-as if he were bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh that was basely assaulted in Washington yesterday. We claim him at once as our President; and if, which Heaven forbid, he should die in consequence of his wounds, every southern house will go in mourning and every southern heart bleed as every southern tongue claims the martyr as its own.

We cannot find words in which to describe the crime, if crime it was and not the act of a lunatic. Strange it is indeed that Russin and the United States-the freest country and the most despotic-should breed the kind of men that turn out to be assassins.

We dare not now speculate upon the hitherto unexpected results which would follow the President's death. Truly the ways of Providence are past finding out. We earnestly hope that the President's life may be spared for many years to come. From thousands of hearts, not only in pulpite but in closets-not only in palaces but fervent prayers for the prolongation of the playes gathered about the reader.

The Senate at 12 o'clock went into joint tife of the ruler of his people.

The following sentence is in MONCURE D. CONWAY'S last letter from London to the Cincinnati Commercial. Under present circumstances, it is a striking remark:

"The royal family of England is the envy of all the crowned heads of Europe; nor have there been wanting signs since Lincoln's time that it may some day be the envy of American presidents."

The Dispatch is after G. K. ELLIS, of Beulabville, with a sharp stick. If the Whig would furnish us the name of its King William correspondent who knew so adopted, and the Assembly went into recess. well that there was no G. K. ELLIS in that county, it might thus aid in bringing the eniprit to light.

A BOY EIGHT YEARS OLD ARRESTED FOR MUR-DER. [Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.]

JULY 2, 1881. The boy Oliver Foster, of whom I wrote The boy Oliver Foster, of whom I wrote in my last letter, died of his wounds this Toll was capsized off Foxe's Island in Tanmorning, and the boy Tommy Turner, who cut him several days ago, has been arrested and lodged in joil on the charge of murder. The prisoner is only about eight years of age, and the deceased was but little older. It seems that a stone was thrown through a window of the house of a lady on Byrne street with whom Foster was living, and she sent the boy out to see who had thrown it. The boy saw Turner near by, and charged him with the deed. They got to quarrelling, and the result was that Foster was cut in the left breast with a knife by Turner, the point of the blade touching the Loflammation set in, which resulted in death. The prisoner claims that be was struck by Foster before he cut him.

[From the Commercial World and United States Exporter, May, 1881.] Solid Facts in Life Insurance.

The day has gone by when it was requisite to approach men of intelligence with arguments in favor of life insurance, the wisdom as well as the duty of securing a policy in some reliable institution of the kind being conceded by every sensible person, and therefore it only remains to show wherein one particular company holds a stronger position than its competitors and can extend superior inducements to those who contemplate insurance.

In comparing the annual statements of the leading companies for the year 1880 we find none that makes a more satisfactory showing than the Northwestern Mutual Life-Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Incorporated in 1857, it has advanced with rapid strides, and now occupies a prominent position among the soundest, most prosperous, and progressive life companies in the United States.

Nothing has been seen or heard of the schooner, and it is supposed she has sunk near Fairmount. The body of a negro was found lashed to a mast with a rope around his neck. It is supposed that in his baste he tied the rope around his neck instead of his waisi, thereby strangling himself. Smith's Island vessels were blown and dry upon the beach, one landing in a potato-patch thirty yards distant from the shore. The storm lasted nearly one hour, and was accompanied by vivid flashes of lightning and terrible peals of thunder. On Watt's Island the wind was so powerful that it lifted the schooner Priscilla F. Leach almost clean out of the water. capsizing her and drowning two of her crew, both colored. The captain and mate barely escaped with their lives. Further up the sound the schooner Sunnyside was capsized, and her crew, consisting of Captain McDonald and his son, drowned; also, a colored man was knocked overboard and drowned before assistance could reach him from the schooner McGee.
